PARENTAL DELINQUENCY
Lately it has become the fashion to blame and even to punish parents for the delinquency of their children. That is almost certain to do more harm than good. The theory is that if a child goes wrong his parents are to blame. And so they are, in most cases, but we must take into account the full implications of this generalization.

count the full implications of this generalization.

Most persons, children and adults alike, are pretty much what their parents have made them—certainly far more so than they realize. Hence it follows that when parents do a poor job with their children, a good deal of the blame must fall on their parents—the children's grandparents. And good must be grandparents of a bad job? Because their parents made mistakes, and so on.

so on. Consequently if we want to get back to the real culprits, we must keep on going till we get to Adam and Eve. It's a little late to punish them; besides that job has, already been done.—St. Petersburg Inde-
